Stuart Langley: Beating Heart, Middlesbrough A
Light installation
Church House, Grange Road

The pulsating heart of light contained within Church House aims to promote a message of positivity to the people of Middlesbrough and beyond. The artist has animated the empty building to encourage us to look beyond the prescribed use of spaces, people and things to imagine a more creative and exciting future.

Emma Bennett: Broadcasting House Reimagined B
Digital Print on aluminium
Brentnall Centre, Gilkes Street

Broadcasting House Reimagined is a painting that responds to the architecture of the Middlesbrough building, Broadcasting House. By using vibrant colour combinations and patterns the artist has reimagined the exterior to signify the building's uniqueness and beauty.

Stephen Hurrel: TRANSMIT, TRANSFORM, TRANSLATE C
Light and sound installation
Telephone boxes, Dunning Street (behind the Town Hall)

Resonant of a past age, these redundant yet iconic phone boxes have become triggers of memories for an older generation and perhaps objects of curiosity for a younger generation. They signify a transition, or leap, from an analogue world to a digital world.

Sofia Barton: Boro Through Time D
Digital prints on aluminium
Opposite Virgin Money, Wilson St.

Boro Through Time explores Middlesbrough's rich culture and heritage, using designs inspired by Victorian matchboxes. Themes illustrated include the matchboxes of Erimus (remembering the motto of the city), Orange Pip festival, the bathhouses, football, and the toy shop that everyone remembers.

John Ayscough: We Walked Out of the Wilderness E
Neon Artwork
The Auxiliary, Station Road

A celebration of economic, cultural and civic achievements, this work is intended as reconciliation with the past, celebrating the town's heritage, but suggesting that better times are ahead. It is inspired by an iconic photograph taken by Evening Gazette photographer Peter Reimann showing Margaret Thatcher 'walking into the wilderness' across the former Head Wrightson works in Thornaby.

Andrew McKeown: Endless Convenience F
Steel, recycled rubber crumb and recycled glass granules
Albert Park, Stewart Park and near the Parkway Centre

Endless Convenience is a series of sculptures cast from plastic supermarket food containers. The columns have been made from recycled car tyres and glass granules. The artwork comments on society's reliance on convenience food and plastic packaging.

Oliver Bragg: In Loving Memory G
Series of etched brass plaques
Various park benches in Albert Park

In Loving Memory is a series of engraved brass plaques fixed onto benches throughout Middlesbrough's Albert Park. They are inspired by tales of local legends and anecdotes and fabricated to mimic those that often adorn benches to memorialise or pay homage to a specific person.

Dominic from Luton: After Warsama H
Painted Wall Mural
Station Road

After Warsama takes the legacy of Abdillahi Warsama, the legendary local owner of Bongo Club International, as its celebratory starting point. Fleeing racism in London, he found solace in Middlesbrough — and via the extraordinary Bongo Club International, created a new scene, inspiring a series of countercultures.

Emma Bennett: Carpark Stairway J
Digital Print on aluminium
Cleveland Centre, Grange Road

Carpark Stairway references the external concrete stairway that leads to the Cleveland Centre rooftop car park in Middlesbrough. The painting's strong composition mirrors the actual structure of the stairway, with the artist's addition of bold colours and patterns creating a dynamic image.
